

Change Management in Information Services

Lyndon Pugh

Gower

CONTENTS

List of figures	vii
Preface	ix
Acknowledgements	xi
1. The Nature of Change	1
Characteristics of Change
2. Change Theories	17
Organisations as Machines — Change and the Individual — Interaction of Groups and Change — Interrelationships of Change — Knowledge-Based Theories — The Implications for Libraries
3. Strategies	41
Educative Strategies — Power-coercive Strategies — The Contingency Approach — Again
4. Models and Processes	51
Some Options — The Model — The Influences
5. Structures	71
Ramifications of Structures — Characteristics of Organic Structures — Developing Organic Structures — The Information Network
6. Teams	91
The Impact of Teams — Teams and Managers — Teams, Learning and Change — Team Structures, Leadership and Communication
7. Changing Behaviours	109
Old-Fashioned Management — The Emergence of New Ideas — The Nature of Modern Information Services —

New Management Behaviour — The Emergence of a New
 Middle Management — The Role of the Information
 Professional — User Behaviour

8. Training, Development and Change	131
Training versus Development — Training Theories and Change Management — Contribution of Training and Development to Change Management — Reviewing the Learning Process
9. Motivation	151
Incentive Theories — A. H. Maslow and Others — Hygiene and Motivators — Expectancy Theory — Personal Construct Theory — Motivation and Change Management — Motivation and the Process
10. Conflict and Resistance	169
Causes of Conflict — Cures for Conflict — Some Practical Steps — What Happens When All Else Fails?
11. Epilogue	183
Bibliography and References	185
Appendix: The Checklist	191
Index	197