

CAMBRIDGE STUDIES
IN LINGUISTICS
SUPPLEMENTARY VOLUME

Form and meaning in word
formation

A study of Afrikaans reduplication

RUDOLF P. BOTHA

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS

Contents

	page ix
Acknowledgements
1 Introduction	1
2 Formation	10
2.1 Outline	10
2.2 Category type of reduplications	11
2.3 Category type of bases	16
2.4 Category type of constituents	21
2.5 Lexical category of bases	22
2.6 Lexical category of reduplications	33
2.6.1 "Noun-based verb reduplications"	37
2.6.2 "Noun-based adverb reduplications"	39
2.6.3 "Verb-based noun reduplications"	50
2.6.4 "Verb-based adverb reduplications"	53
2.6.5 "Numeral-based noun and adverb reduplications"	67
2.7 Lexical category of constituents	72
2.8 Number of constituents	74
2.9 Nature of morphological operation	78
2.9.1 Compounding	79
2.9.2 Affixation	84
2.9.3 Copying	85
2.10 Retrospect	86
2.11 Consequences	87
2.11.1 Language-specific consequences	87
2.11.2 General-linguistic consequences	88

3	Semantic interpretation	page	91
3.1	Outline		91
3.2	Survey of meanings		92
3.3	The interpretation rule for reduplications		100
3.4	Considerable number		103
3.5	Limited number		104
3.6	Distribution		105
3.7	Serial ordering		107
3.8	Collectivity		108
3.9	Iteration		109
3.10	Continuation		111
3.11	Attenuation		112
3.12	Intensity		115
3.13	Emphasis		116
3.14	Threats to the analysis		117
	3.14.1 Lexicalized meanings		118
	3.14.2 Nonreferential meanings		118
	3.14.3 Empathy/intensity readings		119
	3.14.4 Game names		122
	3.14.5 Number and distribution		128
3.15	Nature of the proposed rules		129
	3.15.1 (Non)uniqueness of the rule types		129
	3.15.2 (Non)ad hocness of the individual rules
	3.15.3 An alternative conception		139
3.16	Retrospect		142
3.17	Consequences		145
	3.17.1 Language-specific consequences		145
	3.17.2 General-linguistic consequences		148
4	Link-up		153
5	Metascientific retrospection		158
	Notes		162
	References		176
	Index		185