

A photograph of a person in a blue shirt and shorts climbing a large, reddish-brown rock formation. The climber is positioned on the left side of the frame, reaching up towards the top of the rock. The rock face is textured and craggy. The background is a clear, bright blue sky with a few wispy clouds near the top. The overall scene conveys a sense of adventure and risk.

Philosophy, Risk and Adventure Sports

Edited by Mike McNamee

Contents

List of figures	vii
Notes on contributors	ix
Acknowledgements	xiii
1 Adventurous activity, prudent planners and risk	1
MIKE MCNAMEE
2 The quest for excitement and the safe society	10
GUNNAR BREIVIK
3 Legislators and interpreters: an examination of changes in philosophical interpretations of ‘being a mountaineer’	25
PAUL BEEDIE
4 Philosophy outdoors: first person physical	43
JOHN (MICHAEL) ATHERTON
5 Adventure, climbing excellence and the practice of ‘bolting’	56
PHILIP EBERT AND SIMON ROBERTSON
6 Reading water: risk, intuition, and insight	71
DOUGLAS ANDERSON
7 Nature and risk in adventure sports	80
KEVIN KREIN
8 Aesthetic and ethical issues concerning sport in wilder places	94
ALAN P. DOUGHERTY
9 Outline of a phenomenology of snowboarding	106
SIGMUND LOLAND
10 The performative avant-garde and action sports: Vedic philosophy in a postmodern world	118
ROBERT E. RINEHART

vi Contents

11	Extreme sports and the ontology of experience	138
	IVO JIRÁSEK
12	Kant goes skydiving: understanding the extreme by way of the sublime	149
	JESÚS ILUNDÁIN-AGURRUZA
13	Can BASEjumping be morally defended?	168
	GUNNAR BREIVIK
14	Walking the edge	186
	VERNER MØLLER
	Index	198