

Contents

| | |
|---|------------------|
| Acknowledgments | page viii |
| Preface to the second edition | xi |
| | |
| 1 The situation and tasks of the philosophy of art | 1 |
| Who needs a theory of art? | 1 |
| Philosophy as articulation | 4 |
| Art as a natural social practice | 5 |
| Action, gesture, and expressive freedom | 7 |
| Schiller on art, life, and modernity | 12 |
| Identification versus elucidation | 17 |
| What may we hope for from the philosophy of art? | 21 |
| | |
| 2 Representation, imitation, and resemblance | 25 |
| Representation and aboutness | 25 |
| Aristotle on imitation | 26 |
| Visual depiction, resemblance, and game-playing | 31 |
| Contemporary theories of depiction | 38 |
| Representing as natural, human, world-responsive activity | 44 |
| Distinctive functions of artistic representation | 47 |
| | |
| 3 Beauty and form | 53 |
| Beauty, absorption, and pleasure | 53 |
| Kant on natural and artistic beauty | 57 |
| General versus individual form | 62 |
| Beardsley's theory of individual form | 63 |
| Criticisms of formalist-aesthetic theories of art | 67 |
| Defenses of the aesthetic interest of art | 70 |
| | |
| 4 Expression | 75 |
| Feelings about subject matters in life: Wordsworth, Tolstoy, and Collingwood | 75 |
| What is expressed in art? Hegel versus Danto | 82 |

| | |
|---|-----|
| How is artistic expression achieved? | 92 |
| Collingwood's psychodynamic theory | 93 |
| Physiognomic similarity theories | 98 |
| "Working-through" theories | 103 |
| Emotions and contemporary psychology | 104 |
| Why does artistic expression matter? | 109 |
| 5 Originality and imagination | 115 |
| Genius and the pursuit of the new: Kant | 115 |
| Hegel's criticisms of subjectivism | 120 |
| Why originality matters: Adorno on free meaning-making | 122 |
| Criticisms of the pursuit of originality: postmodernism and feminism | 127 |
| Originality and imagination within common life | 132 |
| Creativity: Scruton and Coleridge on artistic imagination | 135 |
| 6 Understanding art | 142 |
| Six strategies for understanding art | 142 |
| The natures of thought and action: Hegel, Baxandall, and others | 145 |
| Pluralism and constraint in interpretation: Abrams, Fish, and Derrida | 150 |
| The special importance of the elucidation of formal-semantic elements | 156 |
| Nehamas and Felski on what calls for elucidatory interpretation | 160 |
| The possibility of agreement in understanding | 163 |
| 7 Identifying and evaluating art | 167 |
| Why we go on arguing about which works are good | 167 |
| Subjectivism and the sociology of taste: Smith and Bourdieu | 170 |
| Dickie's institutional theory | 173 |
| Historical and narrative identifications: Levinson and Carroll | 176 |
| Objectivism: Mothersill and Savile | 178 |
| Hume on feeling and judgment | 182 |
| Kant on feeling and judgment | 187 |
| Personal and/versus discussable: Isenberg, Scruton, and Cohen on taste | 196 |
| 8 Art and emotion | 200 |
| Some varieties of emotional response | 200 |
| The paradox of fiction | 202 |
| Hume on tragedy: denying (1) | 204 |
| Making-believe and quasi-emotions: Walton, Levinson, and Feagin | 207 |
| Robinson on affective appraisals: denying (3) | 213 |

| | |
|--|-----|
| Danto and Cohen on powers of attentive involvement | 214 |
| Aristotle on catharsis | 218 |
| Artistic making and the “working through” of emotion | 221 |
| 9 Art and morality | 225 |
| Some controversial cases: Mapplethorpe, Serrano, Finley, and others | 225 |
| Autonomism and experimentalism | 227 |
| Moralism and the clarification of thought and feeling | 234 |
| Clarificationism and responding to complexity | 237 |
| Art, propaganda, advertising, and cliché | 244 |
| Ethical understanding and working through puzzlement | 247 |
| 10 Art and society: some contemporary practices of art | 253 |
| The reproduction of social life vis-à-vis “infinite satisfaction” | 253 |
| Art and modernity: Schiller and others | 255 |
| Lukács, Marcuse, and Adorno | 261 |
| Structuralism and structural opposition in social life: Lévi Strauss and Althusser | 263 |
| Foster’s postmodern sociocultural criticism | 267 |
| Avant-gardism and contemporary art | 268 |
| Can artistic beauty still matter? What about fun? | 271 |
| Art and social aspiration | 272 |
| Some contemporary practices of art: primitivism, vernacularism, avant-gardism, and constructivism | 274 |
| 11 Epilogue: the evidence of things not seen | 284 |
| Bibliography | 289 |
| Index | 304 |