the internet and information skills

a guide for teachers and school librarians

JAMES E. HERRING

Contents

Acknowledgements xi

Introduction: the internet and the need for effective information skills xiii

1 The learning and teaching context 1
Introduction 1
Learning 2
Teaching 10
Conclusion 19
References 19

2 The internet 21
Introduction 21
E-mail and listservs 22
Search engines 26
Effective search strategies 31
Keeping up to date with search engines 38
The deep web 39
In-service training and search engines 40
Conclusion 42
References 42

3 Evaluating websites 44
Introduction 44
Technical criteria 45
Reliability criteria 48
Educational criteria 50
In-service training 52
Conclusion 53
References 54

4 Subject gateways 56
Introduction 56
Evaluating subject gateways 57
General subject gateways 59
Subject-specific gateways 66
Commercially available subject gateways and online sources 66
In-service training 67
Workshop for school librarians on educational gateways 69
Conclusion 70

5 Information skills (with Anne-Marie Tarter) 71
Introduction 71
Definitions 74
Information skills models 74
Using the PLUS model in schools 78
Information skills and web resources: searching for information 80
Information skills and web resources: evaluating websites 82
In-service training 84
Conclusion 89
References 91

6 The PLUS model and the web 93
Introduction 93
Purpose 94
Location 101
Use 104
Self-evaluation 109
In-service training 110
Conclusion 111
References 113

7 Developing a school website 114
Introduction 114
Purpose of the site 115
Designing a storyboard 116
Elements of design 120
Information skills on the school website 123
Developing an intranet 126
In-service training 129
Conclusion 129
References 131

8 Developing an instructional website 132
Introduction 132
Approaches to instructional website design – purpose and audience 133
Evaluating instructional websites 135
Design techniques 136
Resources and information skills 141
Collaboration between teachers and the school librarian: a case study of Linlithgow Academy 142
Filamentality 153
WebQuests 155
Conclusion 155
References 158

9 Future developments 159
Introduction 159
The future curriculum 159
Future trends in the internet 160
Implications for teaching information skills 161
Future roles of the teacher and the school librarian 162
Conclusion 163
References 163

Bibliography 165

Index 169