

Communication, Technology and Society

Lelia Green

CONTENTS

Figures and tables	ix
Acknowledgments	xi
Glossary and abbreviations	xiv
Introduction	xxv

1 What fuels technology change? 1

The mythology of technology • Is technology neutral?
Mythology and gun control • Technology's relationship to power and privilege • The method and the mythology of the electric light bulb • The ABC of technological advantage • Progress—for whom? • Being postmodern • The challenge of change • Conclusion

2 Technology adoption and diffusion 21

Piecing together an understanding of technoculture • The social control of the telephone • Discourse analysis and the social biography of things • The expectation and experience of technology use • The theories of adoption and diffusion • High and low involvement in technology adoption • Adopter characteristics • Factors which affect product diffusion • Interpersonal influence • Opinion leaders • VALS (Values and lifestyles segmentation) • Conclusion

3 Domestication of technologies 43

What is a 'domesticated technology'? • Integrating technology into the household • Imagining community
• Boundary markers • Technology as a boundary-breaker
• Power and consumption • Maslow's hierarchy of needs
• Applying Maslow's theory to online behaviour • Household validation and the exploration of experience • Researching the dream • Conclusion

4 Fragmenting mass media in the postmodern information society

61

The massification of media and information • Time, space and communication • Media effects? • The objectivity of the media • The media and globalisation • The local in the global • Postmodernism and the information society • Postmodernism, peasants and the proletariat • The information economy • Commodification in the postmodern • Conclusion

5 Information policy in the information society

78

The nature of information • From chaos to wisdom • The technologically convergent society • Filling the blank area in mediated communications • The information workforce • Information and education • Bureaucracy and information • The central data bank • Privacy, information security and freedom of information • Copyright and intellectual property rights • Conclusion

6 The public interest and the information divide

99

The public interest • Justifying the public interest • Redefining the public interest • Information poverty • Information access • Transition, stress and information poverty • The information divide • The thoroughly modern First, Second and Third Worlds • Building information wealth: Malaysia • Conclusion

7 Mass media and the public sphere

116

The public sphere • Habermas' ideal of a public sphere • Government, citizenship, information and the public sphere • Cyberspace and the public sphere • The public sphere and national identity • Technology in an Indigenous public sphere • The social sphere and imagined community • Particularistic media and the micro public sphere • Conclusion

8 Communication policy and regulation

133

Regulation as a contest of interests • Regulating telecommunications: the language of debate • A global information infrastructure • Regulation and national identity • Regulating freedoms of speech and communication • Undermining government: media and communications underground • Regulating the access and dissemination of information • Moral panics • Conclusion

9 Popular culture in technoculture 153

Popular culture and the public sphere • Constructing popular culture • Television in popular culture: The Young and the Restless • Popular culture on the Internet • Interactivity and technoculture • The importance of popular culture broadcasting in people's lives • Internet community and popular culture • Cyborgs and science fiction • Conclusion

10 Gender, power and technology 171

Gendered competence with technology • Gendering technology • Fear of technology • The masculine world of the hacker • Power and compulsion on the Internet • What about cybersex? • Gender and harassment on the Internet • Gender in Internet culture • Gendering postmodern media consumption • Conclusion

11 Making sense of being in cyberspace 192

Getting connected to cyberspace • Some Internet definitions • A taxonomy of cyberspace? • Screening the senses in cyberspace • Feeling your way on the Internet • Hate on the Net • Panicking about morality • Is cyberspace brain-changing? • Conclusion

12 Technoculture and social organisation 211

Work and gender in the information society • Is the postmodern female? • The full-time part-time woman • The modern man • Metaphor • Technocultural technology • Technocultural policy • Technocultural culture • Technocultural society

References 231

Index 243