Inter, text

Mark Boardman

WEBS.

contents

Acknowledgements Conventions	xi xiii
Introduction: Some background to language and the Web	1
What the book is not 2 Human communication 3
Unit one: Getting really wired: the physical context of websites	7
Aims of this unit 7 A terrible beauty is born: how personal computers began 7 Everything within: the origins of the Web 9 The march of time: developments in web design 16 Summary 20
Unit two: Front-of-house: institutional websites	21
Aims of this unit 21 Virtually there: websites as metaphorical buildings 21 Basic burger – nothing on it: developments in web graphics 26 Marking territory: web address names 29 Mapping territory: finding your way around 31 Summary 35
Unit three: Boundaries real and imagined: personal websites	37
Aims of this unit 37 How the Web defeats boundaries 37 Publishing for everyone 39 Does the language of websites exist? 41

Doppelgänger: your web personality 48 Summary 50
Unit four: Streamers and flashers: sound and video content on the Web	53
Aims of this unit 53 The digital revolution 53 It's alive: multimedia content 55 Narrative enforcement: pop-up windows and spam 63 Summary 64
Unit five: Ready or not: searching the Web	67
Aims of this unit 67 Indexes and catalogues 67 Computers as searchers 69 The language of dead links 77 Comparing search engines 79 Advanced searching and Boolean logic 84 Summary 85
Unit six: The raw materials of web writing	87
Aims of this unit 87 Two languages of the Web 87 What you see is not what you get 88 Summary: full circle 94
References and further reading Index of terms	95 99